

"Our greatest challenge in this new century is to adopt an idea that seems abstract - sustainable development."

Kofi Annan

SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT GOALS

Is Milano an inclusive city? Do we have equity in the city of Padova? Is it possible to ride a bike using the bike paths in Catania? Are there childcare facilities in Pesaro? If in Venice the path towards environmental sustainability is interesting, could the city of Tangier think of replicating the initiative or proposing an exchange of experiences?

In short, how can local administrators and citizens benefit from the amount of information available and understand where their cities are on the path towards achieving the International Sustainability Goals?

On 23rd October 2020 the SDG Portal for Italy will be officially launched, the first Italian portal able to provide the state of the art on urban sustainable development, increasing citizens' awareness and facilitating national and international dialogue to promote and accelerate progress towards full sustainability.

AICCRE, thanks to the Platforma project, has developed a portal that presents the SDGs indicators developed in each of the Italian cities: a platform that allows you to find all the provincial capital cities and see at what level each of the 17 SDG of UN Agenda 2030 has been developed.

Today this portal is developed by two countries: Italy and Germany, but it is already under construction, by the end of the year, also that of the Kingdom of Morocco, the first non-EU country. The objective is to represent the largest number of cities in the world, adding to the existing portals the representations of other countries and to build, thanks to the coordination of the National Associations of Local Authorities, communities of local authorities that are committed to strengthening cooperation and exchange between their cities.
